In Papua New Guinea, when a medical emergency happens, everything depends on how quickly help can respond, but with no roads or ambulances, that help can feel out of reach. Samaritan Aviation exists to be ready in those moments, flying life-saving missions by seaplane to reach patients in remote villages. Each flight turns days of travel into about an hour and carries not just medical care, but prayer, compassion, and the message of the Gospel. That kind of readiness is made possible by a community of monthly supporters called the Compassion Crew. For $19 a month, you can help keep these planes ready to go the moment a call comes in. Join today at compassioncrew.org and be part of bringing hope when it matters most.
