In some of the most remote parts of Papua New Guinea, a medical emergency can mean days of travel by canoe through flooded rivers and dense jungle, but Samaritan Aviation changes that. As the only floatplane ambulance service in the country, they land directly on rivers beside remote villages, turning those long, dangerous journeys into about a one-hour flight to lifesaving care. Their work goes beyond the flight, delivering medicine, caring for patients with prayer, and sharing the Gospel with every person they serve. Because these flights are completely free, people experience the love of Christ in a tangible way. If you would like to be part of bringing hope and healing to those in need, you can give today at samaritanaviation.org.
